County hurting for doctors

Albert Delaney waits for his wife, Agnes, to finish seeing the doctor at Bluegrass M.D. in Hopkinsville. Christian County has only one primary care physician for every 2,000 people, far below the state average of one to 1,000. Some health officials estimate the problem is far worse, and the shortage of doctors is straining families' budgets and forcing some local residents to go elsewhere for their health care needs.

Chrissie Johnson, 26, drives to Madisonville every few months to get her 18-month-old daughter prescriptions for soy milk.

Johnson and her husband receive assistance through Kentucky's Women, Infants and Children program, which resembles federal food stamps. However, she can only use the funds for soy milk if she proves her daughter is lactose-intoler-

Johnson's 7-year-old son uses the same doctor. But when she and take Medicaid payments, she accepted the offer. Because Johnson lives in Crofton, which doesn't have a full-time primary care physician, she's been trying for years to set all her kids up with doctors in Hopkinsville.

No DNA links Burke to murders

KFB: Accidents among teens could be more plentiful in May

FROM THE KENTUCKY PRESS NEWS SERVICE

A recent report by Kentucky Farm Bureau insurance company has shown that May is one of the busiest months of the year for accident claims among teenage drivers.

The company reports data trends from 2008 to present show that accident frequency among male and female 16 to 17 year olds goes up in May and October. Bob Cornelison, Calloway County Farm Bureau agency manager, said local statistics trend about the same as state numbers.

The number of local accidents involving young drivers has stayed roughly consistent over the last few years, said Sgt. Scott Svebakken, Murray Police Department public information officer. In May 2011, MPD responded to 21 accidents involving drivers under the age of 21, he said. In April 2011, there were 25 accidents with young drivers, he said. Young drivers comprise a significant portion of the accidents Murray police work, Sve-bakken said. For example, in October 2011, there were a total of 96 accidents, and a third of those involved drivers under the age of 21.

KFB points out that the month of May involves a lot of activities like proms, graduations and the start of summer schedules that may lead to more teenage drivers on the road.

Svebakken said he believes the problem is distracted driving, with fewer young drivers understanding the importance of paying attention at all times.

'It's definitely an area where younger drivers need to be educated, because of the dangers of distracted driving. They need to be aware that they need to focus on their driving, and on not on

Nurse in Afghanistan

dies in Skype chat with wife

HOUSTON (AP) — The wife of an Army officer serving in Afghanistan witnessed her husband's death as the two video chatted via Skype, his family said Friday.

The circumstances of Kevin Capt. Bruce Clark's death were not immediately available. The Pentagon said it was under investigation, and his brother-in-law said he didn't have details.

We are entrusting the military with investigating and with finding out what happened to Capt. Clark," Bradley Taber-Thomas told The Associated Press.

Clark, a 43-year-old Army chief nurse, grew up in Michigan and lived previously in Spencer-port, N.Y., a suburb of Rochester and his wife's hometown. He joined the Army in 2006 and was stationed in Hawaii before he was assigned to the William Beaumont Army Medical Center in El Paso. He deployed to Afghanistan in March.

Taber-Thomas said in a statement that Clark died Monday while talking to his wife during one of their regular Skype ses-

DOCTORS: Shortages can cause problems, even for the insured

Another five said they currently accept new Medicaid patients. This does not count specialists who also provide some primary care.

Most people who have health insurance can find treatment, even if it means traveling out of the county. The uninsured can often get treatment through St.

But the shortage strains every part of the local health care system. It increases doctors' workloads. leaves St. Luke short on volunteers, and limits options for all patients, often causing them inconvenience and budget problems.

As a result, some who are complacent or can't afford the gas or time for long trips don't seek preventive care at all. In the end, this puts an undue burden on Jennie Stuart's emergency room, Bowers said.

Examining causes

Two national trends help explain Christian County's

First, primary care physicians, which rural areas need in higher volumes than specialists, are entering the job market at alarmingly low rates. More medical students are becoming specialists, as these jobs promise better salaries and hours.

Second, rural areas don't appeal to most doctors entering the workforce, Bowers said.

Demand for health care is high enough that most doctors can get the kind of practice they want wherever they go, so the surrounding environment becomes a high priority when they consider potential jobsites, Bowers said. Most prefer working in big cities, she added.

"I'm not selling the hospital when I've got to recruit," she said. "I'm selling the community.'

When she is able to convince doctors to visit, they usually decide to work here, she said. But catching doctors' interest is hard.

Additionally, because the recession has put strains on independent practices, hospitals in urban areas are buying many of those offices out, said Jodi Mitchell, Kentucky Voices for Health. New doctors see more security in joining a hospital's staff ently — as most doctors do here, including those affiliated with Jennie Stuart.

How bad is it?

For the county's population of roughly 74,000, Jennie Stuart has 74 doctors on its active staff. Beyond the 18 who have adult primary care offices, most are specialists in fields like radiology and oncology. The hospital also has 49 doctors on its associate staff. Most of these doctors live in Tennessee, and many commute to Jennie Stuart to work in the emergency room.

Anita Walker, the hospital's medical staff coordinator, said Jennie Stuart's members make up at least three-quarters of Christian County's doctors. Most of these doctors work primarily from their own offices. But as members of Jennie Stuart, they have access to the hospital for surgeries and appointments.

The hospital makes its revenue by charging patients for rooms, nurses' services and other expenses, Bowers said. She said doctors typically bill patients separately.

Must have entries submitted by June 16, 2012 stantly. She said another three primary care doctors are coming here this summer. But the county is especially short on neurologists and urologists, and it no longer has an ear, nose and throat doctor, she said.

St. Luke, the county's only free clinic, sometimes has five or six weeks' worth of patients on its waiting list, said Betsy Bond, the clinic's director. The only reason is a shortage of volunteers: five doctors and two nurse practitioners.

"They keep the place open," Bond said. "They're our heartbeat." But having new doctors volunteer for even a couple hours a month would make a substantial difference, she said.

With numerous doctors' offices backed up even for patients with private insurance, this shortage comes as no surprise.

Sending poor patients to specialists is even harder, said Mona Boyd, St. Luke's nursing director. "I don't want to say it's because the doctors don't care," she said. "It's just that we don't have a lot of the specialists in this area that a lot of our patients need." Boyd sends patients to Lexington and Nashville for orthopedic and neurological treatment. process can take weeks, and the trip is long. But patients usually find friends or family members to drive them, Boyd said. "I hope we don't run into a problem with transportation, but I'm sure that that's going to be a problem eventually," she said. The U.S. Department of Veterans Affairs pays a local doctor to give veterans primary care, but patients on VA insurance must drive to Nashville for appointments with any specialists, a VA representative said.

Even for patients with private insurance, doctor shortages usually mean less time with physicians and therefore less counseling on diet, weight management, exercise and other personal care, said Elmer Whitler, who researches doctor shortages at the University of Kentucky.

Losing these services drives up the cost of health care, said Mark Pyle, director of the Christian County Health Department.

"Without adequate preentative services, health care costs increase for the treatment of preventable disease and illness." Pyle wrote in an email to the New Era. "This applies to access to primary health care and oral health."

Academic studies have drawn conflicting conclusions about the relationships between doctor concentrations and overall health care spending. But on an individual level, steady preventive care typically costs less than treating a disease.

Future outlook

Most forecasts of physician numbers do not look hopeful.

If the Obama administration's health care law stands, it will guarantee insurance to roughly 46 million more Americans. This would tighten the doctor supply even more, for metropolitan areas as well as small towns.

The aging baby boomers will likely also increase the volume of care this country needs.

In the last decade, major studies have predicted shortages between 85,000

A 2007 report by the Kentucky Institute of Medicine said the state's doctor shorthas persisted for decades and presented no 'quick fix.''

'Even if all the barriers that have prevented a sufficient and well-dispersed supply of physicians were suddenly to disappear, the task of recruiting and educating an ample cohort of doctors would take years to accomplish," it reads.

The state's three medical schools are enrolling more students to increase Kentucky's doctor supply, but it will take several years to see the effects, Whitler said.

As Bowers searches for doctors willing to move here, she always evaluates whether candidates will settle down and stay for many Jennie Stuart gives out $2,000 scholarships every year to students in Christian and Todd counties inmedical school, she said. In the scholarship's 10-year history, it has not yet netted any doctors for the Jennie Stuart network, she said. Most recipients have not ended up in medical school. But Bowers hopes it will make a difference in the long run.

Doctors who grew up here are the most likely to move here after their residencies, she said.

'Little old Hopkinsville is up against Boston and Chicago and all of these bigger cities," she said. "They're not throwing darts at a map and saying, 'I'm going to Hopkinsville.

During the first half of Friday's trial, prosecutors called witnesses who had last seen Brent Burke before the murders, or previously talked to him about his wife. Michelle Lovelace-Sprague was a mad he could kill her, Sprague told prosecutors. She dropped him off in the parking lot around 11:20 p.m. and called him 15 minutes later, she said. On the morning of the murders, Brent Burke called Sprague and told her that his wife had been shot. Two other witnesses testified that Brent Burke had previously talked about killing his wife.

Sgt. Ronald Rollins said that Brent Burke was constantly upset over his failing marriage. Once, Brent Burke stormed into the barracks, upset about his wife, and said he was "going to take her into the woods and shoot her," Rollins said.

The defense asked Rollins if he didn't like Brent Burke.

Bank sues Farmer for foreclosure on house

BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

FRANKFORT, Ky. — A southeastern Kentucky bank has filed a foreclosure suit against former Commissioner Richie Farmer and his wife seeking more than $300,000 due on their mortgage loan of 2004.

First National Bank of Manchester filed suit Wednesday in Franklin Circuit, saying no payments have been made "since at least January.

Rebecca Farmer filed for divorce in April 2011, and the case is pending. Her attorney, Brian Logan, told The Courier-Journal that Richie Farmer is responsible for making payments under an agreement made in the divorce case.

"The parties agreed that Mr. Farmer would be solely responsible for the mortgage payments on the marital residence and assume all liability for the loan. Additionally Mr. Farmer agreed to refinance the loan on the marital residence solely in his name,"

Farmer's divorce attorney, Richard Guarnieri, declined comment because he doesn't represent Farmer in the foreclosure. Farmer, who left office in January, lives in the house. Rebecca Farmer lives elsewhere.

The bank is seeking to sell the house to pay off the amount owed and a court order directing the Farmers to pay the balance if the sale price doesn't cover the debt.

The suit comes on the heels of a state auditor's report that found "a toxic culture of entitle-ment and self-dealing" during

Rangers watch for ginseng poachers at park

BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

MIDDLESBORO, Rangers in Cumberland Gap National Historic Park are watching for visitors who try to take more than just memories away after a visit.

Lead Field Ranger Gene Wesloh says rangers are catching more ginseng poachers than in the past. Wesloh told The Daily News that cameras, remote sensing units and a ginseng marking program are lowering the amount of the root, which is popular in energy drinks and as an aphrodisiac.

Park staff recently obtained a conviction for one of the ginseng poachers caught last year after he was arrested on a warrant in Lexington. Jeffrey Langford pleaded guilty and was fined $250, ordered to pay more than $1,900 in restitution to the park, and banned for three years from park lands.

Justin M. Greenwell, 27, pleaded guilty to assault under extreme emotional disturbance. The prosecutor agreed to alter his charge from rape and recommended a three-vear sentence. In February 2010, a girl accused Greenwell of raping safety of everyone," said Svebakken. Calloway County Sheriff Bill Marcum said often this time of year students have a lot of other things on their mind, which can make them less careful on the road. He said young drivers are also prone to texting while driving, which is banned in

"Inattention is what always gets people into problems," he said. "If you get a text, pull over into a safe spot and get that done.

Don't text while driving.' Cornelison said no matter the age of a driver, the best advice he can give is to drive defensively. "One thing that I might also suggest is that parents make an appointment for their young drivers with their insurance agent to go over details of the policy," said Cornelison. "Because any time you're paying money for a product, it's good to know how it works, and that can help you know how safe driving can keep insurance premiums low." The Insurance Institute for Highway Safety recommends nine ways parents can help keep their teen drivers safer: ■ Do not rely solely on driver education courses. The training offered by driver's education instructors is extremely valuable toward learning the way an automobile should be operated, but it cannot be relied upon as the sole way to produce safe drivers. Teenagers' tendencies to seek thrills and take risks may lead to poor decision making when they are behind the wheel of a car. Parents must be involved in the driver training process and share their own wisdom and experiences so that their children recognize what is truly at risk whenever pulling out into traffic.

■ Know the law. Parents need to know not only general driving laws, but also the additional restrictions placed on young drivers - then parents need to do their part in enforcing them.

■ Restrict night driving. According to ■ Restrict passengers. Multiple teens riding in a vehicle together with another teenager behind the wheel is often problematic and can result in the temptation to exhibit riskier driving behaviors than usual. The IIHS's data shows that about six out of every 10 deaths of teenage passengers occur in crashes with teen driv-

■ Supervise practice driving. Parents need to be involved in the driver training process and supervise a variety of situations as teens learn to drive. As teen drivers increase their skills, parents should offer them supervised opportunities to drive at night, in heavy traffic highway - not leave these more difficult situations to be solely taught by others.

■ Remember that you are a role model. Children of all ages watch their parents to learn from the example set before them. and teens do much of the same when it comes to developing driving habits. Parents who want teens to drive safely must first set a good example and drive safely themselves.

■ Require safety belt use. Even if teens regularly buckle up when riding or driving in a car with parents, don't assume that the same thing occurs when they drive alone or when they are out with friends. Insist that teen drivers wear seat belts at all times.

■ Prohibit driving after drinking. It must be clearly communicated that it is both illegal and extremely dangerous for teenagers to drive after drinking alcohol or using any other drugs. Even small amounts of alcohol are impairing to teenagers.

AG's office could take oversight of KASPER

House Bill 1, the prescription drug abuse law that passed recently in the Kentucky General Assembly's special session, did not mandate the transfer of KASPER from the Cabinet for Families and Health Services to the Office of the Attorney General. That was a sticking point for many opponents of the so-called pill mill bill, including physicians who were concerned that law enforcement oversight of their practices would be too intrusive. Some said it could have a chilllegitimate patients with chronic pain. KASPER, an acronym for Kentucky All Schedule Prescription Electronic Reporting, is the electronic monitoring system for prescriptions. Leaving KASPER in the cabinet was one of the compromises that preceded the passage of HB 1. The law does require physicians to register on KASPER and to report prescriptions they write for pain medications. Also, physicians must check to see if their patients have received prescriptions from other doctors.

OUR OPINION ing effect on doctors who treat

Now, despite the compromises achieved for HB 1, there's a chance that the monitoring system could still become the attorney general's responsibility. Gov. Steve Beshear announced Monday that he's considering an executive order to move KASPER from the cabinet. He said he plans to first discuss it with Attorney General Jack Conway.

Kentuckians can expect another partisan dispute over this issue. Beshear and fellow Democrats, who control the House, favored moving the prescription tracking system to the attorney general. And House Speaker Greg Stumbo said he believes Beshear has the authority to use an executive order to transfer KASPER. Republicans, who control the Senate, opposed the transfer.

Those who favored leaving KASPER with the cabinet will argue that the governor should not thwart the General Assembly's decision on this issue. And they have a point.

But we cannot comment on this dispute without acknowledging this: For once, Beshear appears to be using an aggressive maneuver to drive good public policy. This newspaper and others have often criticized Beshear for failing to be more assertive.

While we recognize some of the concerns about moving KASPER to the attorney general's office, we agree the governor should pursue the executive order if he believes it is the best way to combat the state's serious drug abuse problem.

It's also important to remember that the cabinet is under significant pressure to reform its social services branch and the way it protects child abuse victims. The beating death of 9-year-old Amy Dye, of Todd County, and other abuse cases brought attention to the cabinet's deficiencies. Considering the work ahead for the cabinet, it's not unreasonable to shift KASPER to another branch of state government.

Human membership expired

do not know how to break the news to my little wife, but it looks like her membership in the human race has expired. Good citizen that she is, (or was before she became nobody) she decided not to renew her driving license, but it turned out to be a bad idea because she is now left with no proof that

At the bank where we encountered this problem, we could no longer transact some important business until she makes application for a restoration of her identity as a per- HIGHTOWER son. We have been doing business with the bank for 30 years, but they told us this is a government requirement enacted for our benefit. Buster, you sure had me fooled on that one!

We thought that maybe a passport would save her from extinction but we discovered that it too had lapsed and no longer could be used. It looks to me like this is going to be a threestep process in which you submit proof of proof of proof that you are who you claim to be.

The ever-helpful people at the bank advised us to drive to the nearest license branch facility and apply for a new identity card, but that is going to be hard for her as she no longer drives. We were advised to ask a friend to drive us to the license branch but all our friend are too old to drive too.

I understand that she will need three items of identification before the license bureau can act and one of them is a valid license.

Only a very shrewd bureaucrat could come up with the idea of using a valid license to apply for a valid license, which you wouldn't need if you already had a valid license or 'sumpinlak' it.

I suppose that we will ultimately be able to establish that she is still a person and I am assured that the government will be with her during all ten steps in the process. Also I am sure that there will be a fee to pay somewhere along the way. After all, the government has to pay for all these services it renders to us.

All of this leads me to let you in on a little seeming meaningless aside that is one of the great regrets of my life. You see, I quit cussing several years ago under the simpleminded belief that I could make it through life with using swear words and profanity.

I was naïve enough to think that the government had made all the regulations it could think of but I was sadly wrong. The necessary and logical response (necessary for sanity) to all these absurd rules is to cuss vigorously. Sadly, I seem to have lost all the required skills that I need to maintain my sanity. When I ponder the action of my government, I find myself to be sadly cuss-word deficient.

I suppose that we could shoot all the bureaucrats and burn down the courthouses but that would be against government regulations.

It seems that any way you move, you encounter the long arm of the government.

You younger people must just look for someone a little smarter than me to solve this problem, but I don't know where in the world you would find him.

Mitt Romney: Conservative Extremist?

dergraduate students is how to listen to the campaign talking heads and fig ure out what the poll said. That is, the poll that led to the strategy that led to the talking points that you're hearing from the various campaign talking heads almost in unison. This week, for example: Mitt Romney, conservative extremist. Catch it. Axelrod (David, super-strate-

ne of the first things I teach my un-gist). Cutter (Stephanie, deputy campaign manager). Biden (Joe), even. Romney is "extreme" on tax policy, foreign policy, immigration policy. You can catch the word 'extreme" in all the comments. I haven't seen these polls, but I've seen enough to know what they're saying: Swing voters aren't into extremes. That's why they're swing voters. They are basically for want of a better term, moderate. So what do you do when well known? Easy. Fill in liberal. And it worked. Big time. Twenty-four years later, I'm sure the polls are telling the Obama folks that the easiest guy for them to beat is a capi tal-E extreme capital-C conservative. So off they go.

There's just one difference.

Michael Dukakis was, and is, a liberal. Proudly. Painting him as one was both easy and authentic. It worked because it Romney is a much tougher sell as an extreme conservative.

Can we talk? Extreme conservatives don't get elected in Massachusetts. Liberals and lobsters. If Romney were an extreme conservative, he would have locked up the Republican nomination in February, not April.

National Public Radio did a story this past week about the new Obama "extreme conservative" offensive. They were focused on Ohio, which is as good a place to

They interviewed both Republicans and Democrats. And here's the striking thing: None of the folks they interviewed thought Romney was an extreme conservative.

The conservatives, as a matter of fact, weren't quite convinced that he was con servative enough. Seriously, what kind of extreme conservative would have successfully promoted "RomneyCare" and generally supported gay rights and women's rights?

The only problem with a good strategy is that it might not actually fit the guy you're running against.

Can I see Romney as a hopeless opportunist? Sure. All things to all people. A lib eral in Massachusetts. A conservative in New Hampshire. Hard core in March, moderate in August.

As they used to say in Massachusetts, he wasn't pro-choice or anti-choice; he was multiple-choice. Multiple-choice Mitt. That works. The only problem is that people think all politicians are opportunists. Being an extreme conservative is much worse — or, from the Obama perspective, much better.

Can I see Romney as a hopelessly out-oftouch rich guy, the boy from Bain, the man with the Cadillacs and the horses and the offshore investments and the friends who own (and don't just root for) NASCAR teams? That works. Lower taxes for money you don't earn? Sure. Bailouts for Wall Street but not for Detroit? Sure.

Only problem is, everybody who runs for president is rich by the time they do. And people don't hate rich people nearly as much as they do extremists

Here's the thing about presidential politics: At the end of the day, it has to ring true.

Rick Santorum or Newt Gingrich certainly would have been easier for Obama to beat, because their views really are more extreme. Romney is a hard pill for many conservatives to swallow precisely because he is less conservative than they'd like.

Sometime between now and November, the president's team is going to have to focus on the opponent they've got, instead of the one they would have preferred.

Hopkinsville needs smoke-free environment

n February of 2011, we were one of 40 communities awarded the Achieve Grant, which is designed to address the health of our community. One of the first projects was to develop a team that would analyze the policies and the environment within our community and to help develop new policies that create a healthier

Last summer, I attended a conference in Baltimore with several community leaders. The group included Mayor Dan Kemp, YMCA Executive Director Paul Watts, YMCA fitness director Warren Noe, Jennie Stuart Medical Center executives Eric Lee and Austin Moss, Chamber of Commerce President Carter Hendricks, Vickie Smiley, of the Housing Authority of Hopkinsville, and Superintendent Brady Link and Ruth Lynch, both of Christian County Public Schools. We learned about the health issues that surround communities across the U.S., and we learned how setting policies and creating the right environment can help change the health of our community. From the beginning conversations in Baltimore, as an Achieve Team, we all recognized the need to create smokefree environments within our community.

Since then, our team has merged with Mark Pyle and the community assessment team from the Christian County Health Department, which also recognizes the need to create smoke-free environments. I was raised on a tobacco farm here in Christian County and tobacco paid my way to higher education. Tobacco helped purchase my first vehicle, and raising tobacco was instrumental in my development as a person and my character as a whole. However, I have never smoked and no one in my immediate family smokes.

Years ago, I probably would have been on the opposite side of this issue. Some things have drastically changed since then. Through the process of the Achieve Grant, I have begun to look at the data of the health of our community in comparison to surrounding communities within the state, and around the U.S. I have learned that we have some major health issues within the state and our own community that we need to address. We are behind the progression of my other cities and states comparable to Hopkinsville. North Carolina, the largest producing burley tobacco state in the country, decided to ban smoking in public places in 2009, and Tennessee passed it in 2007. In ad-

Besides the data that supports smoke-free environments and the need as it relates to our community health, the most important reason I support a smoke-free policy is my children. I love our city, but I know that the health of our city needs to drastically improve. I don't want to have to choose to take my business out of the city in order to sit in a clean air atmosphere. I believe a smoke-free policy will confirm with industry, retail, and restaurant businesses that Hopkinsville is progressive in our thinking.

We are the only top-10 city in Kentucky that does not have a smoke-free policy. My daughter has a chronic lung disease, cystic fibrosis, and we personally are unable to patronize many local restaurants due to the amount second-hand smoke she would be exposed to. Instead, we have often chosen to do business in Clarksville.

We owe it to our kids to do what is right. In the same way, we owe it to employees to protect their health as well. In today's economy it is tough for individuals to find a job and when they do so, I believe it is our responsibility to protect them from secondhand smoke. For example, think about the pregnant mother whose only chance of employment is in a smoke-filled restaurant.

It is important for our city to move forward and pass this smoke-free ordinance. Many will cry out that an individual that owns a business has the right to choose what they do in that business. I respect and understand that; however, non-smokers have a right to clean air when in public.

This smoke-free ordinance, to me, is about so much more than a business' right to choose what they do at their establishment. It is the right thing to do for our community. Sometimes the right thing will face strong opposition. The sad reality is that the voice of the minority who oppose something will always be louder than the silent majority

Council members should do what is right for all of our citizens. In order for us to move forward I believe we have to be progressive in caring about our community. No, this is not the only health issue we have in our community, but we have to start somewhere. If you look at the county health rankings, you will see we have many issues that we need to address.

I completely understand the impact of tobacco in this community; however, protecting the rights of an individual and protecting them from something that is harmful is far more important than money. I believe we have an obligation to protect our citizens Our children need to be protected, and creating smoke-free environments helps do just that. Smoking is the No. 1 cause of premature deaths in Ameri ca. With the rise of health costs and health insurance, we need to take an educated look at this issue and help Hopkinsville become a healthier city.

Perils, politics of 'don't say gay'

f 20 Republican lawmakers in Missouri have their way, it will soon be illegal for administrators, teachers and even students to talk about homosexuality in the state's public schools. Derided as the "don't say gay" bill by opponents, H.B. 2051 "prohibits the discussion of sexual orientation in public school instruction, material. or extracurricular activity except in scientific instruction on human reproduction.'

A similar, less draconian, bill passed the Tennessee State Senate last year – but died in the House a few days ago. Utah legislators passed their own version of "don't say gay," but it was vetoed by the governor in March.

Some social-conservative lawmakers in these states are worried about what they see as a "homosexual agenda" being promoted in public schools. When pressed to give examples, Rep. Steve Cookson, the Missouri bill's lead supporter, pointed to the "80 school-sponsored gay-straight alliances" across the state

HAYNES

Cookson apparently doesn't understand that Gay-Straight Alliance clubs are student-initiated, not school-sponsored. In fact, under the federal Equal Access Act, secondary schools must permit students to form such clubs if the school allows other extracurricular clubs. Cookson's bill would not only run afoul of the EAA, but it also would violate freedom of speech protected by the First Amendment.

While Cookson may be confused about the status of student clubs, he and other like-minded legislators are clear about where they stand in the culture war over issues involving sexual orientation.

Even as public support grows for greater legal protections for gay, lesbian, bisexual and transgender (GLBT) people, some state legislators – many motivated by religious convictions - are deter-

Meanwhile, many educators and health professionals worry that silencing any mention of sexual orientation in schools will cripple efforts to create a safe learning environment for GLBT students frequent targets of bullying and harassment, according to various studies.

If enacted, Missouri's law would presumably bar teachers from saying anything to combat intolerance toward GLBT students or from teaching anything that mentions gay people in history, current events, art or literature.

Last week, the American Academy of Pediatrics denounced the Missouri bill as "harmful" to the best interests of children, "All children and teenagers need to feel safe in their schools," said Dr. Stuart C. Sweet, president of the state's chapter of the academy, "and HB 2051 takes that assurance away from them."

At least one Republican legislator in Missouri, Rep. Zachary Wyatt, agreed with Dr. Sweet about the potential harmful impact of the bill. In a letter to his home-district newspaper, the Kirksville Express, last week, Wyatt (who is not running for reelection) wrote that he was compelled to speak out against his colleagues who support the bill. Without assisting students, he argued, "how can we protect gay kids in rural schools where many are afraid to even mention the word gay, let alone address this type of issue?" On Wednesday, a few days after writing the letter,

Rep. Wyatt came out to his colleagues, becoming the only openly gay Republican state lawmaker in the country. He called it a painful decision – but necessary if it helps galvanize opposition to the bill. I keep thinking of those kids getting bullied or worse yet, killing themselves," Wyatt said. "I felt I needed to sacrifice a little." CHARLES C. HAYNES is director of the Religious Freedom Education Project at the Newseum, 555 Pennsylvania Ave., N.W., Washington, D.C., 20001. Email him at chaynes@freedomforum.org.

Hopkinsville trainer Jones wins 2nd Kentucky Oaks

BY MONICA K. SMITH NEW FRA COMMUNITY FOITOR

LOUISVILLE, Ky. — Lightning danced around Friday afternoon at Churchill Downs, causing a delay in the day's main event, the Kentucky Oaks. But soon after the clouds parted, Hopkinsville native and horse trainer Larry Jones celebrated his second win in the race for 3-year-old fillies with Believe You Can.

"I always liked her and (the owners) thought a lot of her," Jones said. "She never gave us a reason to think other-

Believe You Can, owned by former Kentucky Gov. Brereton Jones, entered Friday with 10-1 odds. By post time, the odds for the 3-year-old filly were at 13-1.

But Believe You Can, in post position No. 9, finished the 1 1/8 mile, $1 million race in 1:49:50, edging second-place finisher Broadway's Alibi, which started in the No. 6 post.

Taking the reigns of Believe You Can was jockey Rosie Napravnik who not only captured her first Kentucky Oaks race but became the first woman to win

Hot pace, talented, deep field for Derby

BY BETH HARRIS

LOUISVILLE, Ky. — Hot pace. Muggy day. One of the deepest, talented fields in years.

A delicious stew with all the ingredients for an unpredictable

Kentucky Derby. 20-horse field for Saturday's race is so stacked that unbeaten Gemologist is no better than third choice on the morning line.

In other years, the Lukas colt would be the talk of the Derby. In this one, early favorites Bodemeister and Union Rags have grabbed the spotlight. Still, some very talented colts could go off at big odds — I'll Have Another at 12-1 or, at 15-1, Take Charge Indy, whose jockey Calvin Borel has brought home long-shot winners twice in five years.

"This is the best bunch I've seen in a long time," four-time Derby-winning trainer D. Wayne Lukas said. "I was out there riding next to some of

Kentucky gives Calipari raise following title win

BY COLIN FLY AP SPORTS WRITER

Kentucky coach John Calipari is getting a raise after the Wildcats won the NCAA basketball

The school said Friday it awarded an 8.3 percent increase annually in his guaranteed compensation over the remaining seven years of deal now his worth $36.5 million. Three assistants also received multiyear extensions. "It's rare, in this day and age, to be able to keep a staff together that has helped produce a national championship and back-toback Final Four runs," Kentucky athletic director Mitch Barnhart said. "We want to show them how appreciative we are of their hard work and dedication, and how much they mean to this program.'

Calipari will receive $5.2 million annually from endorsements, base salary and retention bonuses for each of the next six years. The deal increases to $5.3 million in 2018-19. He can also earn up to $850,000 a year in performance bonuses.

Assistant coaches Orlando An-(two-vear extension). Kenny Payne (three years) and John Robic (two years) will have base salaries ranging from $250,000 to $350,000 before incentives. Their contracts have a combined guaranteed value of $2.15

Calipari took over the Wildcats in 2009 and immediately elevated the program back to elite status. Kentucky went to the regional finals in Calipari's first year, the Final Four in his second and won the first title of his career in April after a 67-59 victory over Kansas to finish 38-2. It was the school's eighth championship in school history and first since

Nats bounce Phillies

WASHINGTON (AP) Pinch-hitter Wilson Ramos delivered an RBI single with two outs in the bottom of the 11th inning Friday night to give the Washington Nationals a 4-3 comeback vicover Philadelphia Phillies.

Steve Lombardozzi started the winning rally Michael Schwimer (0-1) by singling with two outs, and 19-year-old Bryce Harper – the youngest player in the majors — drew his third walk of the game before Jayson Werth also walked to load the bases.

That brought up Ramos, who hit a 1-2 pitch to bring home Lombardozzi and set off a celebration, with his teammates streaming out of the dugout to greet him at first base.

Ryan Perry (1-0), Washington's sixth pitcher, earned the win. He pitched a perfect 11th, getting the No. 3-4-5 hitters — Placido Polanco, Hunter Pence and Shane Victorino — on groundouts.

■Cubs 5, Dodgers 4: In Chicago, Paul Maholm pitched six crisp innings for his third consecutive win, allowing one run and three hits to lead Chicago over Los Angeles. Maholm (3-2) has won his last three outings after dropping his first two. He has given up three runs over 18 1-3 innings during the streak. David DeJesus and Alfonso Soriano each had three hits to help the Cubs bounce back from a disappointing loss at Cincinnati. Pinch-hitter Joe Mather homered in the sixth. Matt Kemp hit a run-scoring triple and Chad Billingsley (2-2) gave up four runs and eight hits in six innings for the Dodgers. ■Diamondbacks

Mets 4: In New York, Cody Ransom hit a tworun homer and a goahead single in the eighth inning to help Arizona hand New York its fourth straight loss. Paul Goldschmidt hit a

Arizona starter Wade Miley allowed four runs in six innings. Brad

Ziegler (1-1) gave up a hit in the seventh and David Hernandez got Josh Thole to line out to left with runners on first and third to end the eighth. J.J. Putz worked a perfect ninth for his sixth save, a day after blowing a save opportunity against Washing-■Reds 6, Pirates 1: In Pittsburgh, Johnny Cueto remained unbeaten, giving up seven hits in his first complete game of the season as Cincinnati beat Pittsburgh.

Cueto (4-0) struck out three without a walk to improve to 4-0 and lower his ERA to 1.32. Zack Cozart and Drew Stubbs homered on consecutive pitches in the seventh inning off Pittsburgh starter Kevin Correia (1-2)to Cincinnati plenty of breathing room. Jay Bruce later added his eighth home run of the season off reliever Chris Resop.

Nate McLouth, starting in center field in place of an ill Andrew McCutchen, had two hits for the Pirates but they failed to win consecutive games for the first time in three weeks.

Tigers slip past Chisox

DETROIT (AP) — Jhonny Peralta's first home run of the season was worth

Peralta hit a two-run shot in the bottom of the ninth inning, lifting the Detroit Tigers to a 5-4 win over the Chicago White Sox on Friday night. The Tigers trailed by a run when Alex Avila hit a one-out single, and Peralta ended it with a homer to right-center.

"It's the best moment you can feel." Peralta said. "The first home run this year — and walk-off. It's not bad, huh?"

Chicago led 4-2 after Gordon Beckham's tiebreaking two-run shot in the seventh, but Detroit got a run back in the eighth on an RBI single by Miguel Cabrera. Matt Thornton (1-1) got the last out of the eighth but gave up the winning homer to Peralta.

The White Sox are moving Chris Sale from the rotation back to the bullpen to be their closer, but he's not expected to pitch again until next week. 'With everything going on today, we looked at the way they were lining up and with Matt,' Chicago manager Robin Ventura said.

Jose Valverde (2-0) pitched the top of the ninth for the win. Chicago starter Jake Peavy allowed three runs and seven hits in 7 2/3 innings, but the bullpen couldn't hold the lead for him. ■Rays 7, Athletics 2: In St. Petersburg, Fla., former Vanderbilt star David Price, the AL starter in last season's All-Star game, struck out 12 over eight strong innings and Jose Molina hit his first homer of the season to lead the Tampa Bay Rays to their sixth straight win. The Rays, who are a major league-best 19-8, improved to 13-1 at home and won for the 12th time in 13 games overall.

Price (5-1) threw just 106 pitches while allowing an earned run, three hits and a walk. He is the second AL pitcher to win five games this season, ioining teammate James Shields, who got his fifth victory Wednesday.

three runs as Cleveland won for the fourth time in five games. Texas has lost five of seven, but still leads the AL West.

Glass finished with two doubles and a single and Leavell added two singles to lead the Lady Colonels (19-3), who picked up the win despite committing five errors.

You would have liked to have played better defensively, but it showed some character bouncing back that," Christian County coach Jim Perrin said. "We got prom and weddings to worry about. One girl's going to a wedding, so we haven't been focusing very well of late. But it's always good to win."

Lauren Hobson earned the victory on the mound after striking out two in four innings of work. Glass picked up the save.

The Lady Colonels closed the night with an 8-0 rout of Harrison County.

Glass knocked two more doubles to help Hobson, who struck out two in five innings to earn the pitching win.

the event. Napravnik paced Eden's Moon (No. 4), Alibi and Jemima's Pearl, who all were expected to run well. Immediately after the race, one man lamented, "Where did No. 9 come from?'

Jones said he was still nervous about the outcome of the race going into the first stretch. He feared the pace was too quick at the beginning, but relaxed his nerves as he watched Believe You Can do the same. In the end, Jones smiled beneath his cowboy hat.

"I get very good horses to train," Jones said about his success. "At least that's what it says online. A lot of people think that anyway. I don't know if God is blessing me. He gave me this talent and this desire. I'm fortunate to be able to do this."

Napravnik's win was especially poignant because of the strong feminine theme associated with the Kentucky Oaks by the wearing of the color pink, but also because the day was dedicated to the fight against breast cancer.

Believe You Can paid $29.60, $11.80 and $6.40. Broadway's Alibi returned $6 and $4.20, and favorite Grace Hall paid $3.20 to show.

them, and let me tell you. this is a hell of a group."

Lukas will saddle one of the longest shots, 50-1 Optimizer.

"History tells us that you can't throw anyone out," said Todd Pletcher, a former Lukas assistant who has two Derby starters in-Gemologist. cluding "There have been some winners the past few years that have been way down everybody's depth charts."

Some of the strongest contenders — Hansen, for example — have had the most success running at or near the pace. But their task is complicated by the presence of speedball Trinniberg, who could prove to be enough of a pest on the front end to compromise any horse willing to keep pace with him.

If the early fractions in the 1 1-4-mile race are fast enough, it could set up well for a deep closer like Dullahan, Daddy Nose Best or I'll Have Another.

Three-time Derby winner Bob Baffert, who trains 4-1 favorite Bodemeister and long shot Liaison, called it "one of the toughest Derbys I've been in probably the last 10 years."

"I've brought some really good horses here, and they were the best horse, but they got beat," he said, referring to Lookin At Lucky, the 2010 race-day favorite who was trapped on the rail and finished sixth. In 2001, his heavy favorite Point Given wound up fifth.

"I don't want to get myself too pumped up. Even my son, Bode, doesn't want to talk about it," he said.

The 7-year-old namesake of Bodemeister is worried. Upon learning the colt was headed to the Derby, he asked his dad, "Well, what if he loses?"

"It's a little extra pressure for me to make sure that he runs well," said Baffert, who had a medical scare in March when he was hospitalized with a heart attack in Dubai.

Bodemeister, ridden by Hall of Fame jockey Mike Smith, goes into the starting gate staring down 129 years of Derby history. The last horse to win without racing as a 2-year-old was Apollo in 1882.

Union Rags, the 9-2 second choice ridden by Julien Leparoux, is the best horse trainer Michael Matz has brought to the Derby since he won with undefeated Barbaro in 2006.

"I was lucky enough once," he said. "It's hard to believe you can get lucky twice."

Matz trains the strapping colt for Phyllis Wyeth, the former steeplechase rider who was paralyzed from the waist down in a 1962 car accident and gets around in a wheelchair. She is married to painter Jamie Wyeth, whose father was the renowned artist Andrew Wyeth. Gemologist, undefeated in five races, is trained by Derby winner Pletcher, yet he's been overshadowed by the other entrants since arriving late in Louisville and getting most of his training in Florida. "He's done everything he could possibly do," Pletcher said, "but part of it might be because the 2year-old races he ran in weren't the Breeders' Cup races. He was a little late in developing."

Two of Gemologist's wins came at Churchill Downs.

- BROTHERLY LOVE Kyle Busch not only earned his fourth consecutive spring race win in Richmond, his Kyle Busch Motorsports Toyota found Victory Lane in Friday night's Nationwide Series race. Kyle's brother, Kurt, drove the No. 54 Monster Energy car to KBM's first ever NNS win. Kyle and Kurt are splitting the ride this season. Prior to the victory, the team had scored only one top 10 in 2012, an eighth at Auto Club Speedway.
- 2 BROTHERLY RIVALRY Kyle's Richmond win also tied with his brother Kurt for 26th on NASCAR's all-time wins list. Each brother has 24 career Cup wins — Kyle in 266 race; Kurt in 409. The only active Cup drivers with more career victories are Jeff Gordon (85), Jimmie Johnson (55), Tony Stewart (46), Bill Elliott (44) and Mark Martin (40).
- 3 ON A ROLL Dale Earnhardt Jr.'s second-place finish at RIR was his third top-3 finish in the last five races. Earnhardt has vet to finish outside of the top 15 this season and, for the first time since his DEI days of 2004, has enjoyed a string of five consecutive top-10 finishes.

Kyle Busch merges victorious in wild, late-race scramble in Richmond

Kyle Busch does victory burnouts following his win in the Capital City 400 from Richmond International Raceway.

By MATT TALIAFERRO Athlon Sports Racing Editor

Saturday evening's Capital City

400 at Richmond International Raceway was not unlike many of the NASCAR Sprint Cup events over the past month. A dearth of cautions — only five, the second-least at RIR in 14 years — pockmarked the 300-mile event.

However, Richmond provided an exciting, and controversial, finish that produced an all-too-familiar victor in Kyle Busch.

While Busch had yet to win in the 2012 season, his victory marked the fourth consecutive win in Richmond's spring race for the 26-yearold Las Vegas native. His past wins have been dominant, but it took a string of events late in this race for Busch to cash in.

"Wherever that last caution came from, that was the saving grace just the luck of the day," Busch said of a debris caution on lap 388 of 400. "The guys did a fast pit stop, got us the lead off pit road, which was a huge advantage, just being able to give me the control of the restart and not have to wait on Tony (Stewart) or cause myself to spin my tires, or what have you, and get behind.

Monday that Mike Ford had been hired as crew chief for its No. 43 team and driver Aric Almirola.

"Mike Ford is an elite crew chief who knows what it takes to be a winner at this level," team co-owner Richard Petty said. "We're fortunate that he was available and that we could reach a deal to bring him over to our place. We've taken a lot of big steps at RPM in the past year and I think this might be that one piece of the puzzle we were missing."

Ford led Denny Hamlin's No. 11 Joe Gibbs Racing team to six consecutive Chase for the Championship appearances.

Hamlin and Ford won a total of 17 Cup races from 2006-11

The fireworks started well before then, though.

A caution for debris on lap 311 changed the complexion of the race. Busch was awarded the Lucky Dog, placing him on the lead lap after being down one.

Race leader Jimmie Johnson was then issued a pit road penalty during his stop, sending him to the rear of the field. The subsequent restart found Tony Stewart the leader, with Carl Edwards to his outside. Edwards, though, believed his No. 99 Ford to be the lead car, and when the green waved, Stewart spun his tires. allowing Edwards to sprint away. NASCAR ruled that Edwards "jumped the restart" by taking off before crossing into the "restart box" - a pair of painted lines on the track prior to the start/finish line that mark when the leader can hit the gas.

Edwards was assessed a black flag, handing the lead back to Stewart. But just as it appeared Stewart would cruise to his third win of the season, the final debris caution was thrown, reportedly for an aluminum can on the backstretch.

When the field hit pit road for a final set of tires, Busch beat Stewart out and quickly jumped to a sizable lead on the restart.

Dale Earnhardt Jr. also got by Stewart, but when his brakes began to fade, the race was clearly in Busch's hands.

"That's what it looked like to me," a curt Stewart said of the debris afterwards. "I mean, it was out of the groove. It had been sitting there for eight laps. When the caution is for a plastic bottle on the backstretch, it's hard to feel good about losing that

As for Edwards' penalty, he and crew chief Bob Osborne questioned NASCAR about it during and after the race, even meeting with officials in the NASCAR hauler. Their contention was that the team's spotter was told by an official that they were the lead car, prompting Edwards to bring the field to green. He was also posted on the track's pylon as the leader.

NASCAR vice president of competition, Robin Pemberton, made it clear after the race that Edwards was not the leader and that he did jump the start. So his point was moot re-

"We had to just agree to disagree, and that's the way it is," Edwards said after his meeting with NASCAR. "They run the sport, and they do the best job they can, and I drive a racecar and do the very best job I can."

Due to lower than normal water levels, these fish have to spawn in the best available location close to their normal spawning areas. I have received reports and seen largemouth on the bed last weekend on both lakes now. Local anglers report the largemouth bite as good. We now have largemouth in all three stages of the spawn, which are the prespawn, spawn and postspawn stages. The majority of the largemouth are in the spawn stage now on both lakes. These fish have followed the staging banks leading from secondary points onto prime spawning flats. Transition banks typi-

Local anglers report the smallmouth bass bite as good. The majority of these fish have spawned with a few still shallow guarding fry. Reports have the post spawn smallmouth being taken on main lake points and banks as well as channel banks and secondary points in the creeks and bays. These guys came to fish, golf, and ride their motorcycles. Naturally, fishing was my activity of

My friend, Bruce Wurdeman from St Louis, was partnering with me on the trip. We were located about 30 miles from the closest town. Even the mosquitoes had a hard time zeroing in on our location.

The rules for fishing were simple — have fun and catch lots of fish. Other than that, there were no rules. We could start any time after day light and fish till 4 p.m. We could take a lunch break, if deemed necessary, and then return to fishing. If a group chose to, they could weigh in their catch and head back out for more fishing. But they were not allowed to possess more than their creel

Everyone was so laid back, and fishing was not necessarily important to them. Most went out late and returned early. Several boats had four to six people in them, and the opportunities for fun and socializing were numerous.

Anglers could weigh in any species of game fish they desired as long as they were of legal size. Catfish was acceptable in this case.

This created a challenge for anglers since there were hybrid stripers in the lake, and it wouldn't be long before someone would have a limit if found schooled up. The interesting thing about this lake is that these hvbrids don't grow to large sizes. The average weight of these fish is about 4-5 pounds. A 7pounder is considered a good catch from what the locals told us.

Our biggest challenge was battling the winds for four straight days. I've never been in Texas when the wind wasn't blowing at least 20 to 30 mph. We traveled across the lake one day just to see if we could wet a line. We got wet instead. I'm just thankful that my boat could handle the massive waves. We were never in any danger, just wet from the splash and the wind blowing the spray in our faces.

Saturday morning was tournament time. and we headed out at 6 a.m. to see if we could muster up any game on our lines. Our original plan of fishing the sea wall was abandoned quickly as the fish had moved. The wind played a role in chasing them off to deeper wa-

Our backup plan was to troll away from the wall and keep working our way out to deeper water on each new pass. When we reached a depth of 7-9 feet, we found success. By 8:30 we had 33 fish in the live well and were hoping for more. But just as quickly as we caught all these white stripes, they were gone. The remainder of the day was spent trying our best to reach our limit of 50 stripes, but that was not to happen. We tried, but for the rest of the day we only managed to catch three more fish.

It was weigh- in time, and our total was 30.6 pounds. We knew from the past that if you didn't have at least 36 pound or more, you were out. The guys that weighed in right after us had over 62 pounds. They had four hybrids with their limit of white stripes.

We cleaned enough fish to feed over 200 men on Saturday night. I was not involved in the cooking process but would have been more than happy to do so.

Next came the moment of truth for Bruce and me. The loudspeaker announced third place, and to our surprise, our names were belted out. We were all smiles. Hopefully we were able to present a humble attitude as we went to the front to receive our reward of tackle and a tackle box.

I was so pleased to be with a group of Christian men who knew how to hold their language and still have lots of fun. Life is Good!

Kentucky's Matthew Mitchell signed a sevenyear extension Thursday, putting him among the highest-paid coaches in women's college basket-

The deal runs through 2018-19 season. Mitchell is guaranteed at least $7.7 million in salary and endorsements, before performance-based incentives, over the life of the contract.

"He has high expectations for everybody, not the least of which himself," Kentucky athletic director Mitch Barnhart said. "He expects great things and that's why you want him leading your program, and that's why we're fortunate.'

The fifth-year coach is 114-56 with the Wildcats. The school has been to three straight NCAA tournaments, setting a school record, and two regional finals in the past three years. Kentucky won its first SEC regularseason championship last

"This is an incredible thing that's happening,' Mitchell said. "As you look around, there's not a whole lot better places than this. For me, I'm just saying, at a young age I got an incredible opportunity to come to a place where we knew we could have a chance to get it to this spot. So now (my wife) Jenna and I don't have any desire to bounce around the country.'

Mitchell was an assistant coach at Kentucky from 2003-05 and was the head coach at Morehead State from 2005-07. He began his career as a graduate assistant at Tennessee in 1999 before spending three seasons at

Coyotes go up 3-1 on Preds

NASHVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — Shane Doan scored in the first period, Mike Smith made 25 saves and the Phoenix Coyotes beat the Nashville Predators 1-0 on Friday night to grab a 3-1 lead in the Western Conference semifinal series.

By winning their first game in the month of May, the Coyotes can advance to the conference finals with a win in Game 5 on Monday night in Arizona.

The Predators played with forwards Alexander Radulov and Andrei Kostitsyn scratched for a second straight game, this time the decision by coach Barry Trotz to stick with the lineup that won 2-0 on Wednesday night.

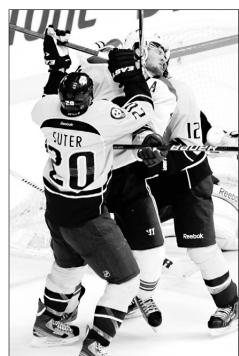

They sorely missed their offense, though Nashville thought it tied it with 7:12 remaining. But officials waved off the power-play goal because a whistle blew before the puck crossed the line.

The Predators wound up outshooting Phoenix 25-24, but they had chances with the net open they simply missed with Radulov and Kostitsyn on the sideline. Radulov leads Nashville with a team-high six points in the postseason, and Kostitsyn is tied for the team lead with three goals. Fans cheered the announcement that the two were scratched after they were suspended for Game 3 for an apparent curfew violation last weekend in Arizona.

Nashville had plenty of chances, outshooting Phoenix 10-5 in the third. The Predators even got a power play at 11:34 when Coyotes defenseman Derek Morris cleared the puck over the glass and went to the box. The Predators had a scrum in front of the net after Mike Fisher threw the puck at the net, but the official behind the net immediately waved no goal. Trotz pointed across the ice, asking for a review. It didn't take long for an announcement of no goal with the official ruling the whistle had blown before the puck crossed the line.

Phoenix improved to 4-1 on the road in the postseason, spoiling what had been a big party in Nashville with three blocks of Broadway shut down right in front of the arena. The Predators put two big TVs outside for fans to cheer but didn't give them much to yell about.

The Coyotes outskated and outshot Nashville from the start, coming with much more energy. They even got a power play 90 seconds in only to see the Predators kill that. Then Ryan Suter had a turnover near the net, and Coyotes left wing Mikkel Boedker had a chance on Pekka Rinne right in front before the 6foot-5 Finn blocked it with his right pad.

Fans did their best to try and spark the Predators with their usual standing ovation through a timeout in the first period to a catfish tossed onto the ice early in the third. Nothing helped the Predators' aim getting past Smith into the net.

Nashville went 0 for 3 with the man advantage. The first came when Rostislay Klesla was penalized for boarding Predators forward Matt Halischuk right in front of the Coyotes' bench. Replay showed Klesla appeared to grab Halischuk's jersey before pushing him into the boards, and Halischuk went to the locker room briefly.

Watney answers wake-up call

CHARLOTTE, N.C. (AP) - Nick Watney answered what he referred to as a wake-up call at the Wells Fargo Championship by taking the lead. Tiger Woods might need one after missing the cut.

Watney had gone nine straight rounds on the PGA Tour without breaking 70 and had failed to crack the top 10 in all nine of his stroke-play tournaments this year. He worked hard to change that, and it paid off Friday with an 8-under 64 that gave him a one-shot lead over Webb Simpson going into the weekend.

A two-time winner last year, Watney had failed to crack the top 30 in a fullfield event this year, and missed the cut in New Orleans for his first weekend off at a tournament since Woods wound up in rare position.

He failed to make a birdie on any of the par 5s or any hole on his back nine, missing a 4-foot birdie putt on his 17th hole with the cut on the line. Woods wound up with a 73 — his eighth consecutive round in the 70s for an even-par 144 to miss the cut by one shot.

It was only the eighth time in 267 events on the PGA Tour that Woods missed the cut, and the first time it happened at the same place twice Quail Hollow, where in four trips before the downfall in his personal life Woods had won once and never finished worse than Watney was at 12-under 132 and will play in the final group with Simpson, who had a 68. Watney is staying with Simpson, who lives about a mile away. One side benefit from his 64 was that he has a bet with his host that high score takes out the garbage each day.

Stewart Cink, winless since he captured the British Open at Turnberry in 2009, had a 69 and joined Ben Crane (64), John Senden (68) and D.A. Points (68) two shots out of the lead. Ryan Moore had a penalty stroke for his ball moving on a tap-in and had to settle for a 70. He was at 9-under 135.

■Insperity Championship: The Woodlands, Texas, Tom Lehman had an eagle and five birdies on the first eight holes on the back nine, then bogeyed the par-4 18th for a 7under 65 and a one-shot lead after the first round of the Champions Tour's Insperity Championship.

Fred Funk and Houston native Tom Jenkins were tied for second, and past winners John Cook and Bernhard Langer topped a large group at 68. The 53-year-old Lehman, the player of the year last season after winning three times, has three top-12 finishes in six Champions Tour starts this year. He eagled the par-5 15th en route to his lowest score in nine Champions Tour rounds at The Woodlands.

Michael Allen, coming off consecutive victories at TPC Tampa Bay and the Legends of Golf betterball event with David Frost, opened with a 69.

■Spanish Open: In Seville, Spain, France's Gregory Bourdy shot a 6under 66 in windy conditions to take a one-stroke lead after the second round of the 100th Spanish Open.

Bourdy had a 5-under 139 total at Real Club de Golf de Sevilla.

Italian teen Matteo Manassero boosted his hopes of making the U.S. Open, shooting a 70 join Spain's Jorge Campillo (72) of Spain and Englishmen Robert Rock (72) and Simon Dyson (69) at 4 under. Manassero, ranked 64th, needs to be inside the top 60 by May 21 to earn a spot in the U.S. Open.

Director Bess Kargman's documentary follows a half-dozen aspiring professional ballet dancers at the Youth America Grand Prix, an elite competition for performers ages 9-19 where prizes, scholarships and contracts with prestigious companies await.

Structurally similar to the documentaries "Spellbound" (about the National Spelling Bee) and "Waiting for 'Superman'" (about public-school students hoping for chances at a better education), "First Position" reveals the home lives of these youngsters as they prepare and lets us get to know their families, all of whom have made who tries to maintain as much of a normal teenage life as possible (she attends public high school, has a boyfriend, was a cheerleader). She's got the body, looks and talent to be a star ballerina, but she also knows that time is running out and contracts with top companies are scarce.

Kargman gives everyone equal time and attention — she depicts no one as a villain or diva, nor does she lead us toward rooting for any particular dancer. Even Rebecca comes off as gracious and polite, wishing her competitors good luck backstage and wondering why others don't do the same. The director's tasteful, intimate approach features all of the theatricality of the art form with none of the backstage drama; "The Turning Point," this is not. Her film actually may be a little too understated, a little too safe.

But Kargman is both a former ballet dancer herself as well as a journalist,

"Mother's Day," inspired by the 1980 Troma slasher flick of the same name, is notable for a chilling lead performance from Rebecca De Mornay and not much else.

The home-invasion thriller from director Darren Lynn Bousman (who made the second, third and fourth "Saw" movies as well as one of the worst films I've ever seen in my life, "Repo! The Genetic Opera") takes us through all the obligatory steps of the genre: Bad guys enter, assert their dominance and pick people off one by one. The hostages make futile attempts to attack or escape but their actions aren't as important as the structure itself, which is meant to serve as a crucible of human nature.

That would be all well and good if the characters here were vaguely intriguing. They're not even cliched types — they're just sort of bland, and eventually they're bloody. That makes De Mornay's quietly commanding, creepy turn stand out even more.

Fifteen workers gathered underneath the hot sun Wednesday afternoon for a service project at Sanctuary House. Throughout the afternoon, the workers planted cleaned flowerbeds and trimmed hedges in the facility's front courtyard along East Ninth Street.

The group was mostly comprised of students from the Daymar Insticollege Clarksville, Tenn. The students are members of the college's criminal justice club. Workers from the local Wal-Mart Transportation Office also helped in the project.

Velasquez, Michelle public relations director for the criminal justice club, had been thinking about a service project for the club and wanted to do something for Sanctuary House, which assists victims of domestic violence and sexual assault.

Velasquez said grew up in an abusive family and thinks Sanctuary House offers a valuable service.

'Cinco de Mayo': Little bit of history, but plenty of beer

ALBUQUERQUE, N.M. — Here's what Cinco de Mayo has become in the U.S.: a celebration of all things Mexican, from mariachi music to sombreros, marked by schools, politicians and companies selling everything from beans to beer.

And here's what Cinco de Mayo is not, despite all the signs in bar windows inviting revelers to drink: It's not Mexico's Independence Day, and it's barely marked in Mexico, except in the state of Recipes for the Mexican 'holiday' Puebla, where the holiday is rooted in a complicated and short-lived 1862 military victory over the French. But don't let that spoil the party. In Houston, ballet folklorico dancers will ring in Cinco de Mayo by stomping to traditional Mexican music in a city park. New York City will close parts of Spanish Harlem and Queens for street fairs as Mexican flags flap from apartment fire escapes and car antennas. Albuquerque honors the day with a Mariachi concert and free cab rides for those who show their love for Mexico with a little too much Dos Equis XX or tequila. Even West Des Moines, Iowa, has an all-day festival with Mexican food, artwork and live music.

The holiday has spread from the American Southwest, even though most are unaware of its original ties to the U.S. Civil War, abolition and promotion of civil rights for Often mistaken for Mexican Independence Day (that's Sept. 16), Cinco de Mayo commemorates the 1862 Battle of Puebla between the victorious ragtag army of largely Mexican Indian soldiers against the invading French forces of Napoleon III. Mexican Americans, during the Chicano Movement of the 1970s, adopted the holiday for its David vs. Goliath storyline as motivation for civil rights struggles in Texas and Cal-

In 1936, they be-

s Ernest Petty reflected on his long life with much of it spent on farms operated by the Petty brothers, he recently decided to document that family's way of life during the days of the Depression and the war years of the early 1940s.

The Petty brothers, Joe, George and Edgar, formed a farming partnership in 1929, an endeavor which lasted until 1944.

Farm partnerships have been around for a long time and still operate on large scales throughout the area, but for the Petty family, it was a necessary plan that worked well and saw the brothers and their families through a rough time in history.

Not only did they survive well on the farms, but with hard work and determination, they expanded their partnership to the ownership and rental of 1,000 acres of farm land.

Petty, 81, and his wife, Wilma Baker Petty, now enjoy a life of retirement and live on Pine Ridge Drive.

They have two daughters, Cindy and Sarah, but their son, Bruce, died in 2010 of injuries in a traffic accident.

When the family partnership was disbanded, he and his wife continued farming on their farm on Russellville Road for a number of years. Following a life of farming, the family moved to Hopkinsville and Petty worked for a moving company and retired from Covan World-Wide Movers Inc. Petty now enjoys activities at before returning to the field. Hog-killing time, which always came on a very cold winter day, was also a time when families and neighbors worked together.

Tobacco was the main cash crop, and the hard work of producing that crop stretched throughout the year from burning plant beds to the planting and harvest, always with everyone looking forward to the end of the year when the crop was sold.

They would set tobacco with a machine pulled by two mules.

The mules walked slowly as the men riding the setter would place the plants in the ground that would then be watered from a water tank on the setter.

They had to back a trailer into a pond and fill it with buckets of water for the tank.

The Pettys had dairy cattle and sometimes hand-milked as many as 30 cows twice a day.

"It was a great day when we got our first milking machine,' Petty said.

It was also a great day in 1934 when they bought their first tractor, a F-20 Farmall with a plow, disk and cultivator.

He remembers going to school at Casky when the family lived on the Garnett farm, and going to the Casky Baptist Church.

He remembers life without electricity or a telephone, but he doesn't recall that being a problem to a little boy as he could look forward to his mother reading to him and his sister, Jean

Ticking clock prompts proposal problem

Tips for keeping a clean computer omputers typically get used A LOT and the keyboard, mouse and monitor can collect gunk, grime and germs. The following tips from the America Cleaning Institute might help you in cleaning those computers. Before you begin, check the owner's manual for any specific cleaning instruc-

Cleaning the keyboard

With your computer turned off and unplugged, disconnect the kevboard.

Use compressed gas to clean between the keys. Hold the container so you are spraying at an angle. This will dislodge dust and grime more efficiently. Turn the keyboard over and shake it gently to dislodge crumbs and loose dust. It's best to do this over a trash can. Repeat spraying and gently shaking until there's no more particle fallout. Spray a small amount of all-purpose cleaner on a soft, clean rag and wipe the keyboard, including the chassis and the keys. Be sure the keyboard is completely dry before reconnecting it to the computer.

Cleaning the computer mouse

Most of us use our computers every day, so we're constantly handling that mouse, which means that its surface is a breeding ground for all sorts of germs. A good habit is to give the mouse's surface a periodic cleaning. Turn off the computer, then disconnect the mouse and spray a bit of antibacterial cleaner on a soft cloth or use an antibacterial wipe and gently clean the surface of the mouse.

Debris on the underside of the mouse can affect its performance. How you clean the mouse depends on whether you have an optical mouse or a ball mouse. An optical mouse utilizes a beam of light to track movement, while a ball (or mechanical) mouse has rollers inside, each set at a different angle to its counterparts. As the rollers are turned, signals are sent to the computer. Although an optical mouse usually requires less maintenance than a ball mouse, both need an occasional cleaning. No matter which type of mouse you have, shut off and unplug the computer, then disconnect the mouse.

the cotton swab into the mouse.

Using a dry cotton swab, gently wipe over the area to make sure it's dry. Turn the mouse right side up and let it continue to dry for a few minutes before plugging it back For a ball mouse, cleaning the tracking area requires some disassembling. Following the manufacturer's instructions, release the removable cover on the bottom of the mouse and take out the ball. Using a soft cloth or a mi-crofiber cleaning cloth, clean the ball, removing all dust, hair and other debris. If necessary, dampen the cloth with water.

Now take a look at the rollers inside the mouse. Carefully remove any lint and debris with the tweezers. If necessary, use a few shots of compressed gas to remove stubborn lint from the inside of the mouse. Be sure to keep the can upright so you don't spray moisture into your mouse. Next, put a drop of rubbing alcohol on a cotton swab, squeeze the swab with your fingertips to remove excess moisture, and gently clean the rollers and the inside compartment.

Let the mouse air-dry thoroughly before reassembling it and reconnecting it to your com-

Cleaning the mouse pad

What's the point of cleaning the mouse if it's still picking up debris from a dirty mouse pad? Gently clean the pad, using a cloth dampened with an antibacterial spray cleaner. Let it dry thoroughly before sitting the mouse back down on the pad.

How you clean your laptop or desktop monitor depends on what type of screen you have. Regardless of the type, turn it off and unplug before you start.

cleaner onto a soft cloth rather than directly onto the monitor to help prevent fluid leaking into the electrical components inside the monitor. Rub gently. For an LCD screen, rub gently, using a dry microfiber cloth or a soft cotton cloth. If the dry cloth doesn't completely clean the screen, dampen the cloth with plain water.

don't claim to be an expert on roses, but ask any gardener if they have heard of knockout roses and chances are thev would say yes. That's not surprising since from their introduction into the market in 2000. they have proven themselves easy to grow, not particular about their planting site and wow, what color! We (I have three) also like the knock out roses because they are in that small percentage noted as the most disease-resistant roses on

However (you knew that was coming didn't you?), resistant is not the same as pest-free or immune. Knockout roses have broken all sales records for a new rose. And as we see more of these showstoppers being planted, we are also seeing more disease symptoms and insect

One disease, black spot, known as the worst enemy of the rose grower, has been seen on knockout roses also. This disease causes dark circular spots with irregular margins on the upper leaf surface. Spots enlarge until the leaf yellows and drops from the plant. Look for this problem later this month through August especially if the season is wet this year. A wet leaf surface encourages disease development and spread.

Pick off infected leaves as you find them and rake and remove any fallen leaves. Regular application of a fungicide is recommended. Bayer Advance Disease Control, Captan and Daconil are just a few of the many fungicides available for disease man-

Rose rosette disease is caused by a virus which stunts plants and causes a mass of distorted shoots and leaves with excessive thorns. The virus is transported by a tiny eriophyid mite which feeds on infected plants, quite often multiflora roses growing in fencerows or other areas. then feeds on your knockout

There is no control for Rose rosette. You can try to cut out infected canes and remove them from the garden, but it is very likely the virus will spread to other parts of the plant. If

eriophyid mites, JACKSON

Since we have shifted to the topic of bugs, some of you may have seen the damage this spring caused by the rose slug. These are the larvae of sawflies which feed on the tender leaf tissue, leaving only the yeins. You can find the little green larva by looking on the underside of the leaves. Their damage is mostly aesthetics, since knockout roses will quickly leaf out new tissue once they finish their feeding in June. Many insecticides will control rose slugs except for products which only work on the larvae of moths, not sawflies.

Of course we couldn't finish without a dishonorable mention of the pain-in-the-neck Japanese beetle. It loves to feed on the flowers, skeletonize the leaves and otherwise ravage the roses during July and August. Handpicking beetles in the morning when they are sluggish is effective. Also shaking plants over a bucket of soapy water can dislodge Japanese beetles into their liquid doom. Permethrin, bifenthrin and carbaryl are three insecticides of many effective on the beetles.

Even with this list of diseases and insects, knockout roses continue to prove themselves worthy of the garden. Because of its hardiness, long bloom season and adaptability, it remains a top pick for many gardeners. And compared to many of its cousins, black spot and other pest problems are usually much more minor for the knockout roses. One lesson that should be learned from this is that diversity is the key. Where three or five of one rose or tree or perennial is fine, 10 or more of one plant species may increase your risks for pest problems.

A new publication from the University of Kentucky titled "Roses" (ID-118) is a great reference on rose diseases and insects but also has information on planting, pruning, and general maintenance of all roses, not just the knockout roses. You can download it for free from www.ChristianCountyHorticulture.com. Just click on the Roses link.

Silver dollar plant can pay off in beauty

(AP) — Whoever said that money doesn't grow on trees was right. It grows on a small, bushy

Just one type of currency, though: silver dollars (Lunaria

You have a couple of options for planning your investment. For quickest returns, sow seed indoors in a seedling flat filled with moist potting soil. Kept at about 70 degrees Fahrenheit, the seeds germinate within two to three weeks. Plant the seedlings outdoors at the same time you plant out tomatoes, then harvest your first dollars later this summer. If you plant very soon, you may still be able to get a return on your investment this year.

Despite the "annua" in the botanical name, however, silver dollar plant often behaves more like a biennial than an annual, growing only leaves the first year then expiring the next year after making flowers and dollars.

The second, more relaxed way to grow silver dollar plant is as a biennial. Sow the seeds outdoors sometime in early summer timing is not critical — to rake in your dollars early next sum-

Whichever method you choose, give silver dollars a site with well-drained soil in sun or partial shade. Avoid a rich soil, though, or plants put their energy into making leaves at the expense of flowers and dollars.

MORE THAN JUST SILVER DOLLARS

The flowers that foreshadow the silver dollars are pretty, but not enough to warrant giving the plant a prominent spot in your flower bed. A better location is in a separate cutting garden, a wild area, or nestled — and somewhat lost among other kinds of flowers.

The money plant's flowers have four petals in the shape of a cross, putting it in the Mustard Family, along with broccoli, radish and alyssum. Usually, the flowers are pink or purple, except for one variety with white flowers. For a little more pizazz, there is a variety, Variegata, with white margins on its leaves.

Silver dollar plant, along with other members of the Mustard Family, ripens its seeds within a dry fruit called a silique. As the silique ripens, the two outside halves dry, then fall away to leave the ripened seeds still on the plant and suspended within a translucent and silvery round septum, about the size of a silver dollar.

For dried flower arrangements, cut stems just as the outsides of the pods are beginning to yellow, then hang them upside down in an airy location. Once the outsides dry, rub them off with your fingers without damaging the delicate membrane between them.

AN INVESTMENT IN 'HONESTY'

You might say the silvery orbs that remain also resemble the moon, leading to another common name for the plant, moonwort, as well as the botanical name Lu-

And money and honesty go hand in hand, right? Perhaps that's how silver dollar plant also came to be called "honesty." Some people say it got that name because you can actually see the seeds within the ripened fruits.

Your initial investment in silver dollar plant can be made with seeds from a seed packet, or with seeds snatched from a dried arrangement. You will get compound interest on your initial investment because silver dollar plant selfsows. Too readily in some situations, so put your investment where you can keep a close eye on it, or where other equally exuberant plants can help check its spread.

'Hunger Games' fever makes archery cool for kids

NEW YORK (AP) — In schools and backyards, for their birthdays and out with their dads, kids are gaga for archery four weeks into the box office run of "The Hunger Games" and less than 100 days before the London Olympics.

"All of a sudden sales of bows have, like, tripled," said Paul Haines, a salesman at the Ramsey Outdoor store in Paramus,

A manager there made a sign for the hunting department: "Quality bows for serious archers and girls who saw the movie," he said. Archery ranges around the country have enjoyed a steady uptick among kids of both sexes since the movie began cleaning up at the box office March 23, though heroine Katniss — a deadly shot with an arrow — seems to resonate more with girls.

"Katniss is so inspiring," said Gabby Lee, who asked for archery lessons for her 12th birthday in February after reading the wildly popular book trilogy by

In this April 30 photo, passengers disembark the American Queen steamboat in Henderson.

Riverboat resumes nostalgic cruises on Mississippi River

HENDERSON, Ky. (AP) — The churning red paddlewheel propels the pearlwhite steamboat along the wide Mississippi River, like a slow-moving time machine through a slice of Americana that harks back to Mark Twain and the history, culture and commerce of the 19th century.

Inside the six-level steamboat, passengers enjoy tea time in the ladies' parlor, rousing musical shows in the Grand Saloon, lessons on river history, and fourcourse meals in an antebellum-style dining room.

With the relaunching of a vessel called the American Queen, steamboat travel has returned to the Mississippi and Ohio rivers for the first time since 2008. The boat, the largest of its kind in the world, was christened Friday in Memphis as it left for a seven-day cruise. The 418-foot-long boat, which carries 436 passengers, stopped in Henderson, Ky., Monday, then sailed on to Louisville along the Ohio River for a steamboat race marking the Kentucky Derby before a final stop in Cincinnati. Future cruises will go all the way to Pittsburgh and St. Paul, Minn.; some routes include stops in New Orleans and St. Louis.

"I find myself inspired by the quiet, still majesty of a river of this size, and I appreciate the insight that they've given us for the contribution that these rivers have made to America," said Jim Ahrenholz, 69, an experienced cruise traveler from Illinois who took the trip with his wife Cathy.

The American Queen and its sister boats the Delta Queen and Mississippi Queen carried passengers up and down the Mississippi for decades, continuing a tradition that began in the early 19th century, when steamboats replaced keelboats as the main source of transportation and commerce on the river.

Towns sprouted along the route as the early boats carried cargo like cotton, to-bacco and sugar from Louisiana to Minnesota and back. The ballad "Ol' Man River" from the 1927 musical "Showboat" lamented the backbreaking hardships of black dockworkers. Before the Civil War, the heavy cargo lifting was often done by slaves.

The river was also the site of several Civil War battles, with Confederate and Union ironclad ships battling for control of the strategically vital artery. Author Mark Twain, who was born Samuel Clemens, took his pen name "Mark Twain" from a term used on the river to measure water depth. Twain grew up in a river town, Hannibal, Mo., is best known for his classic novels, "Tom Sawyer" and "The Adventures of Huckleberry Finn." But he also wrote a memoir of his years as a steamboat pilot called "Life on the Mississippi."

Doc rolls out 'Hangover Heaven'

LAS VEGAS (AP) — He had a Las Vegas wedding to attend, but Bryan Dalia was hung over from some marathon partying the night before.

"I did two bachelor par-ties, back-to-back," Dalia said nutting his l and to his forehead as he recalled steins of beer and shots of alcohol the previous afternoon at the Hofbrauhaus Las Vegas, then gambling, dining and drinking martinis at the Cosmopolitan of Las Vegas resort. He remembered "getting a little lost and finding myself on the floor of the Paris" hotel-casino, then "a few more martinis as I gambled my life away."

"How are you doing now?" medical technician Debra Lund asked.

Dalia looked at Lund, swaying with the gentle rocking of a bus named Hangover Heaven as it rolled down Las Vegas Boulevard. Lund checked an intravenous fluid bag, hung from the ceiling, dripping a saline and vitamin solution into Dalia's left arm.

"Better," he replied. "My palms aren't sweating anymore. I don't have that, like, cold sweat feeling anymore."

Dalia, from Caldwell, N.J., was one of the first patients on the rollout day of a mobile treatment center for tourists who spent the night before drinking in all the nightlife Las Vegas has to offer. For a fee, they get a quick morning-after way to rehydrate, rejuvenate and resume their revelry.

"I'm starting to feel great," Dalia said. "This is really very cool."

Doctor and board-certified anesthesiologist Jason Burke calls his fledgling business a medical practice on wheels, analogous to a physician with an RV offering X-rays, MRIs or mammograms, a mobile dentist, or a blood bank bus set up in an office building parking lot.

The idea, Burke said, is to bring relief to tourists with stomach-churning wooziness, headaches and body pains — symptoms that could ruin an entire day in Sin City.

"Many people come to Las Vegas with the intent to drink and have a good time," Burke said as he moved between patients seated on plush benches in the retrofitted, full-sized tour bus. The casino scenery passing outside the windows, the flat-screen TVs, the ceiling mirror and the aide in the suggestive nurse outfit? Hey, it's Vegas.

"I don't think that Hangover Heaven is promoting drinking. I'm not eliminating hangovers," Burke told The Associated Press. "The goal of the business is to get people back to their vacation. I'm decreasing the length of time they're going to be hung over."

Burke said his goal is to arrive within an hour at the caller's hotel.

Once on the bus, treatment can take less than an hour for a $90 basic IV of saline solution, B vitamins and vitamin C. A premium package, $150, includes two bags. For an extra fee, Burke will bring treatment to a tourist's hotel room.

Hotel pet peeves from host of TV's 'Hotel Impossible'

NEW YORK (AP) — If you think you're a picky hotel guest, check out the pet peeves of Anthony Melchiorri, who critiques hotels for a living and hosts a new show called "Hotel Impossible" on the Travel Channel. Melchiorri is freaked out by dirty grout, hates Internet fees and always checks hotel rooms for something he almost can't bear to name.

On the show, which airs Monday nights, Melchiorri advises hotels on how to improve everything from facilities to service to decor with a goal of increasing sales. He's brought his in-your-face, can-do assessments to properties ranging from Gurney's, a historic beachfront inn in Montauk, N.Y., in the Hamptons, to a boutique hotel, The New Yorker, in Miami's artsy MilMo district. This week, he visits the Purple Orchid in California wine country.

Melchiorri has been in the hospitality business for 20 years and has helped reposition storied Manhattan hotels like the Plaza and the Algonquin. But he hasn't lost touch with what the average traveler experiences in those first few minutes in a hotel, and he shared that process with The Associated Press.

THE LOBBY: "When I walk into a hotel, I want the illusion that my stay is going to be perfect. I want to see the bellman greet me. I want to see that the paint isn't chipping. I want the front desk to engage me, treat me like a person, so that I know any problem I may have, they will take care of me. By the time I get to the elevator, I'm already starting to be comfortable."

BIGGEST FEAR: "As soon as I walk in the room, I put my luggage in the bathroom because that's the safest place away from any insects. I say insects because I don't even want to use the word. Now I inspect the bed. I'm looking at the seams of the mattress and headboard, end tables, the side of the bed. Let me be clear: Most hotels don't have bed bugs. I have never found a bed bug in a hotel. But I never put my luggage on the bed, ever. And once I realize there's nothing living in the bed, I look for a metal luggage rack and put my luggage on that." (Metal repels bed bugs; they prefer wood.)

THE ROUTINE: "I bolt the door to the room, and if there's an adjoining room, I check the door to make sure that room is locked. I cannot tell you how many times people have walked in on me. I also look in the shower, sink and tiles for dirty grout. I can't get in a shower with dirty grout, not even in my own house. It freaks me out. Then I open up the ironing board, I make sure it's functional, I look to see that there's no water in the iron and I put it in a corner of my room so it's ready to use. And then I unpack. ... I have a plastic liner from the drycleaners and I put that in the drawer first."

THE EXHALE: "Now that I know my room is clean, I can forget that I'm a germaphobe. I can forget that I didn't want to touch the remote control. If the hotel does its job, and gives me the illusion that it's perfect, then my defenses go down. But if there's a dirty hallway or a light bulb is out or an employee was rude to me, then my cootie-ometer is up."

PET PEEVES: Rooms that don't have enough electrical outlets; alarm clocks that go off at 4 a.m. because the maid didn't turn off the previous guest's setting; hotels that charge for Internet. "The Algonquin Hotel was famous for hosting a lot of writers. When Dorothy Parker was sitting there at the Algonquin Round Table, and she needed a pen, she got a pen for free. Today we write using the Internet. Why should I charge somebody for the Internet if I don't charge them for a pen?"

don't charge them for a pen?"

THE PHONE CALL: "I once implemented a policy at a hotel that every single guest be called by the front desk within 10 minutes of being in the room to make sure they didn't need anything. But then I started getting complaints from people. 'I just got in my room, I was in the bathroom, I thought my wife was calling! If I need you, I'll call you!' So I stopped the phone calls to guests."

NOTHING FANCY: "I really enjoy three-star, limited service hotels like Holiday Inn Express and small boutique hotels like Kimptons. You get your free Internet, your mini-mart, your free breakfast, the room has a beautiful mattress. It's everything I need. The service is not intrusive but a lot of times, I don't want to deal with anybody."

ONLINE REVIEWS: "I find online reviews to be very accurate. I use them every single day. If there are 100 reviews, then you go through them, and I always check the four terrible reviews just to make sure there's nothing that's unacceptable to me. If you're an educated consumer, you can make your own decisions about whether the person who complained about a mushy strawberry in the fruit basket should be taken seriously. I mean, really? You have bigger problems in your life."

No flowers for Turlington Burns this Mother's Day

NEW YORK (AP) — Please, no flowers for Christy Turlington Burns this Mother's Day. No chocolates and no lastconvenience-store minute, cards, either.

A handmade craft from her children would be OK, but mostly what she wants is to have a conversation about the important role that mothers and grandmothers and greatgrandmothers, too — play in families and in larger communities all over the world.

"I never was more appreciative of my own mom and all the other moms out there than when I became one myself,' said Turlington Burns, a model, businesswoman and documentary filmmaker, whose children are now 6 and 8 years old.

No Mother's Day Her Mother's Day is a way to draw attention to maternal mortality, the cause at the heart of the Every Mother Counts advocacy campaign she founded in 2010. It's also a way to get back to the basics and, hopefully, cut through "all the noise" that now comes with a holiday that the National Retail Federation estimates will come with an $18.6 billion price tag in spending by Americans this year.

Typically, Turlington Burns said in an interview Wednesday, she "goes through the motions" and sends her own mom flowers, although that's lately morphed into a living plant that can go in her garden. Turlington Burns worked with her husband, actor and director Ed Burns, to create a short online social-issue film. She recruited Jennifer Connelly, Kelly Rutherford, Ann Curry, Blythe Danner, Debra Messing and Dayle Haddon, among other famous and notso-famous moms, to appear in YOUR MILESTONE

CINCO DE MAYO: Plenty of beer, little history

Over the years, the holiday has been adopted by beer companies as a way to the growing Latino market, even as the historical origins of the holiday remain largely forgot-

David Hayes-Bautista, a professor of medicine and health services at UCLA and author of the newly released "El Cinco de Mayo: An American Tradition, said the holiday's history in the U.S. goes back to the Gold Rush when thousands of immigrants from Mexico, Central and South America came to California during the Civil War. According to Spanish-language newspapers at the time, this first group of multinational Latinos on U.S. soil identified with the Union Army's fight against the Confederacy and often wrote pieces about the evils of slavery.

Hayes-Bautista said these Latino immigrants were concerned about the Union's lack of progress and Napoleon III's interests in helping the South.

"It wasn't until the news came about the Battle of Puebla that they got the good news they wanted,' said Haves-Bautista. "Since Napoleon III was linked to the Confederacy, they saw the victory as the first sign that their side could win.'

Community members gathered inside First United Methodist Church on Thursday in observance of the National Day of Prayer.

The day is observed throughout the nation on the first Thursday in May. It was recognized as an annual observance by Congress in 1952 and the president typically issues a proclamation for the day each year.

President Barack Obama issued his proclamation on Monday, making special mention of prayers for the military just before his visit to Afghanistan. Prayers for the military were offered during Thursday's service in Hopkinsville, which lasted nearly 45 minutes. More than 30 people attended. The Rev. Paige Williams, pastor at First United Methodist Church, led the service with several other parish members speaking throughout. Williams said this is the third year they have had the prayer service. Many parishioners, she said, said special prayers for the service. In the three days leading up to the service, prayer vigils are offered at locations around the church. On Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday this week, Williams said parishioners could be found praying in the church's chapel, prayer garden, prayer room and sanctuary. Thursday's service started at 7:30 a.m. Williams said they try to have it early so people can come before starting their daily routine. Breakfast was available after Williams enjoys sharing the prayer day with the community.

"It's wonderful to invite the community in and to hear the prayers that people either look up to read or write themselves to share with us," she said.

Romney, Mormons brace for a mean political season

BY RACHEL ZOLL AP RELIGION WRITER

SALT LAKE CITY — As 20,000 Mormons streamed from the church conference center, a ragtag group of protesters stood across the street shouting that the Latter-day Saints were going to hell. Mormon families, who had gathered here for two days of speeches and spiritual guidance called General Conference, ignored the hecklers or laughed and kept walking.

This, after all, is a church accustomed to much worse.

Yet, even with a resilience built over nearly two centuries as outsiders, church members are anxious about what's ahead. Republican Mitt Romney is about to become the first Mormon nominee for U.S. president on a major party ticket. That will give them a chance like no other to explain their tradition to the public, but the church's many critics will have a bigger platform, too. And the vetting will take place amid the emotion of what may well be a nasty general election.

"People who have opposed Mormonism forever will use this as an opportunity," said Robert Millet, a religion scholar at Brigham Young University who co-founded a pioneering evangelical-Mormon dialogue. "I don't know if we're ready for this kind of del-

That concern continues this election season. LDS officials have emphasized repeatedly that the church doesn't communicate with the Romney campaign. In a lengthy statement on their main website, Mormon leaders say the church does not "endorse, promote or oppose political parties, candidates or platforms." The Latter-day Saints have been running a multimillion-dollar series of ads, called "I'm a Mormon," since 2010, to dispel stereotypes by telling the stories of individual Mormons. To avoid any appearance that the ads were meant to help Romney, the church didn't buy ad time in Iowa and some other markets with early primaries, said Michael Purdy, an LDS national spokesman. At the General Conference last month, led by the highest authorities of the

Don't be deceived, but discover true joy and security by giving your life to Jesus Christ.

Christian Civic League of Maine and the National Organization for Marriage say they've combined forces to defeat the same-sex marriage referendum proposal on

The chairman of Protect Marriage Maine, Rev. Bob Emrich, says it will organize groups of different faiths as well as people with no faith traditions at all in opposition to the ballot initiative. Maine voters defeated a gay marriage proposal on the 2009 ballot.

Christian Civic League Executive Director Carroll Conley says his group was not a major player in the 2009 campaign, but he be-

CHICKEN SOUP FOR THE SOUL

Sisters tend to their family members' grave sites

"CHICKEN SOUP FOR THE SOUL: FAMILY CAREGIVERS"

The hill was not very steep, at least not for me. I'm still a young 60, but my two companions are a bit older — 94 and 96. My aunt and my mother, worked their way slowly up the incline, braced by their canes and pausing a few times to catch their breath. Each year, on this pilgrimage, their climb takes a bit longer and wears them out more, but they never miss it.

A cemetery is not the ideal place for a senior outing. But they have a way of making even a trip to the family resting place a laughable, enjoyable time. There were once four Crawley sisters, nicknamed the "Board of Directors" because of their way of meeting life with an incredible optimism. Now there were only two left — my mother, Catty, and her older sister, Rita. Each year in the spring, they took care of their parents' and sisters' graves.

Of course, the graves are up a hill, and the sun beat down as the temperature rose.

We reached the graves. My mother and Rita were upset that the mower had left grass all over, obscuring the names of their favorite people. They both insisted on bending down, working at the grass.

her hearing aid, thinking the buzzing was the battery going bad. Rita shook her head a bit, thinking the buzzing was a dizzy spell coming on. Neither had any idea what a war whoop as she began to flail had gotten her in the left ear. Holding her head, she started swinging, circles as Catty came toward her. Now the bees had two targets, then three as I tried to step in. My mothwith one hand and started swinging her cane with the other, spinning in circles even faster than her sister. With no thought at all of her aging body, Rita did a Cossack leap into the air to clear the cane my mother was swishing wildly. My plan was to swat at the bees, scaring them away, but my mother's batting arm had been reenergized, and I valued my head. Besides, little flyers that they didn't need my help at all. A few more high kicks, full twirls, arm thrusts and earsplitting war cries (with some rather racy language mixed in, I'm not ashamed to report) soon made those bees head for the next county. My seniors had won!

sealed the deal with a few more choice invectives about the attackers, then headed back down the hill. I handed each of them their canes. but they just draped the canes over their arms and took the hill in confident strides. I half expected them to break into a chorus-line kick when they arrived at the bottom. They got into the car with no assisdrove off from the field of victory.

Rita's ear had swollen to double its size, but she laughed as she looked at it in the mirror. They didn't remember that they were old until the next morning, when complaints registered from all the muscles they had woken up the day before. Getting out of bed was hard for them, but I was glad to assist. The rest of that day was slow and careful, but we all knew that the day before they had been the Queen Bees.

HOW MANY TIMES? MATTHEW 18:21-22

Terry Peck, Minister Jesus was teaching talked to His followers about many things that day, including the importance of forgiving your brother. After Jesus had finished teaching, His disciple Peter took him aside to ask a question. Who knows, perhaps Jesus' words about forgiving a brother had sparked something in Peter's mind about his need to forgive his brother Andrew, who was also one of the disciples. Peter knew that many of the teachers of his day said that the maximum number of times to forgive another person was three. With impress, Peter asked Jesus about the number of times to forgive and added, "Up to seven times?" Peter must have anticipated that Jesus was going to praise him for setting the bar of faith at such a grand height.

Jesus' response must have floored Peter: "I tell you not seven times, but seventy times seven." It's as though Peter had said, "Set the high jump bar at seven feet?" and

Why would Jesus do this? It seems as though His answer would only discourage Peter. Peter was saying, "I'm willing to try my hardest," and Jesus responds with, "Do the impossible!--with my help". This is also His challenge to us.

time of playing games, there is an intensity that runs through your day. How you see a personal matter will change as a result of events that take place today and in the near future. Tonight: Make sure your choice is relaxing. CANCER (June 21-July 22) ★★★★ You might see a situation a lot differently if you permit greater fluidity and change. Be aware of a tendency right now to become a bit rigid. This attitude will not help a relationship — or any interaction for that matter. Tonight: Squeeze in as much fun as possible.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) ★★★ Let go of rigidity, and honor a better sense of self. You might not want to go far or change what you are doing. Others might push and prod you to get a certain response. Be careful with your tone if you become disappointed or feel frustrated. Discuss your feelings. Tonight: Entertain at your pad.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) ★★★★ Return calls and think carefully when putting plans together. You might not see a situation in the same way as someone who could make a big deal out of the same issue. You might feel pulled in by a desire to take off ent response. Feel free to ask questions and explore rather than handle a responsibility. Tonight: Yapping up a storm.

be possessive or have your way. The response you receive could be equal to your own initial implicit demand. Don't make a situation more difficult than urally good vibes that exist between you and this perneed be. A miscommunication runs through a con- son. Give more of yourself than you usually do, as versation, though it might not be seen immediately. others seem a little stressed right now. Tonight: Zero SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) ★★★★ Others respond to your requests — for now. You'll seize the moment, but you have no idea what the outcome will be. You might experience a lingering moment of selfdoubt. That response could be a warning signal. Tonight: Others continue to be highly responsive. SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) ★★★ Know when you are having an off day, and make it a point to kick back. A loved one has a strong reaction to the momentary you. Don't let words fly, or you both will regret it later. Do for you, but also be more nurturing to a key person. Tonight: Not to be found. CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) ★★★★ Friends encourage you to follow their footsteps regarding plans. Sometimes you need to let go and be fancy-free. This moment in time is a good example. Pressure from an older friend or relative might anger or frustrate you. Tonight: Do your thing. AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) ★★★ Check in with an older relative or friend. He or she will appreciate all the attention. A natural rigidity seems to occur today. Let go of your judgments, especially one that colors a key situation. Tonight: Once more, you are leader of the gang. PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) ★★★★ Keep reaching out for someone at a distance. If you cannot meet halfway in the near future, plan a get-together as soon as possible. Double-check your change, and storm away with a respected friend. You are able to
